ELECTRONICS INDUSTRY —Back in Stride

THE NATION'S Number One Growth Industry is back in stride. Profits, hurt last year by reduced commercial demand and the maintenance of heavy research and development programs, are once again on a strong uptrend. Electronics companies will benefit this year not only from a cyclical recovery in their business, but also from a resumption of their rapid rate of secular expansion.

Even greater growth opportunities for this industry lie further in the future. In its latest review of the electrical equipment industry, The Value Line Investment Survey estimates that the electronics business, as such, could expand its volume by as much as 150% over the next decade. It particularly notes the stocks best situated to take advantage of this remarkable growth. It indicates which are the best values now, looking ahead 12 months, and which over a 3- to 5-year period. The objective, disciplined Value Line measurements, applied to the estimates of future earnings and dividends made by the Value Line research staff, offer you a helpful guide to the most profitable opportunities among electronic stocks in today's market.

The latest edition of the Value Line Survey contains up-to-date Ratings and Reports on 32 electrical equipment stocks, including the 6 issues in the group found to be the most promising at this time. It also contains reports on two interesting asset value speculations (in the office equipment and farm equipment groups), together with current reviews of 4 previously recommended Special Situations that still offer 3- to 5-year Appreciation Potentialities that rank them in the top 20% of all stocks under survey. A copy of this edition will be sent to you at no extra charge under the special offer described below.
